

Graduate study in

Graduate study in

POLITICAL SCIENCE

POLITICAL SCIENCE

AT INDIANA UNIVERSITY

AT INDIANA UNIVERSITY

INDIANA UNIVERSITY BULLETIN

INDIANA UNIVERSITY BULLETIN

This is an artist's model of Ballantine Hall, now under construction, which will soon be the home of the Department of Government.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY BULLETIN
(OFFICIAL SERIES)

Entered as second-class mail matter January 28, 1916, at the post office at Bloomington, Indiana, under the Act of August 24, 1912. Published thirty times a year (five times each in November, January; four times in December; twice each in October, March, April, May, June, July, September; monthly in February, August), by Indiana University from the University Office, Bloomington, Indiana.

Vol. LVI, No. 16    Bloomington, Indiana    July 30, 1958

Graduate study in political science

The choice of a graduate school will be one of the most important decisions you will make during your career. Your choice will determine the faculty and facilities which guide your professional training. To a large extent, it will influence your placement at the end of training and the nature of your professional career. This choice will also affect your opportunities for personal satisfaction during your graduate career.

You will want to select a graduate department which offers a thorough, progressive program of study and a faculty composed of outstanding scholars, conscientious teachers, and skilled researchers. Since few graduate students depend entirely on their own financial resources, you will want to know something about your opportunities for financial support. You will also want to be certain that your department will help you to secure attractive employment at the end of your training.

And finally, it would be wise to check the university's facilities for housing and its opportunities for cultural and personal satisfactions outside the classroom.

The following pages will help you to evaluate Indiana University in terms of your own needs and ambitions.

About Indiana University

The growing need for highly trained scholars, teachers, and public servants has made graduate training in political science attractive for increasing numbers of capable men and women.

At Indiana University the graduate program of the Department of Government provides you with both breadth and depth of training in the basic literature and with methods of inquiry in political science. Graduate courses are planned as enterprises in analysis, offering you the opportunity to develop your individual interests and abilities and to observe, evaluate, and criticize the work of mature scholars. Thus, graduate study is more than accelerated undergraduate work.

After close consultation with your faculty adviser and your faculty committee, you will plan a program of study which identifies a significant area of political science as the core of your training. This program will draw upon diversified offerings which include subject matter courses and research training seminars in (1) critique and construction of both normative and empirical political theory, (2) international politics, law, organization, and administration, (3) American government and politics, (4) comparative government and politics, and (5) public administration and public law.

Your program will also include study in allied disciplines. The choice of such supporting studies will be guided by the focus of your program in political science to assure you of a well-integrated graduate program. Supporting study is available in anthropology, East European studies, economics, education, geography, history, law, philosophy, Slavic studies, social service, and sociology.

You will have an opportunity to develop special capacities for study and research. Foreign languages are designed to provide you with an intellectual tool—not just another requirement for a degree. Special training is available in such methods as historical criticism, quantitative analysis and field study, cross-cultural techniques of investigation, and statistical reasoning.

Graduate registration in the Department is large enough so that a sizable group of students will share common interests and problems with you, but admission is restricted to insure individual attention from the faculty and to offer additional opportunity for informal discussion with faculty members.

Since a number of graduate teaching assistantships are awarded each year, you may have the opportunity to acquire valuable experience in teaching undergraduates.

Advanced degrees

You may plan a program of study leading to the A.M., M.A.T., M.P.A., or Ph.D. degrees. More detailed information and requirements may be found in the Bulletin of the Graduate School, available on request from the Dean of the Graduate School.

MASTER OF ARTS. Students who do not plan to proceed immediately to the Ph.D. degree are advised to work for their A.M. degree. Thirty semester hours of course work are required. Ordinarily one third of this work will be in an allied discipline. The candidate will be advised either to prepare a thesis or to acquire reading knowledge of one foreign language, and he must pass an oral examination covering his area of concern.

Small seminars form the core of graduate study in the Department of Government and give the student an opportunity for self-expression.

MASTER OF ARTS FOR TEACHERS. This degree is designed for teachers who wish to increase their knowledge of the social sciences. Thirty-six semester hours of course work, divided between political science and allied disciplines, are required. Neither language proficiency nor a thesis is required.

MASTER OF PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION. This program offers graduate professional training directed toward administrative careers in public service. Thirty hours of course work are required, including a field study report; the candidate must also pass a comprehensive written examination. Language proficiency is required only if necessary to the candidate's field of specialized study.

DOCTOR OF PHILOSOPHY. Students are encouraged to work directly for the Ph.D. degree without first obtaining the A.M. degree. Ninety semester hours of work are required, part of which must be in allied disciplines. Reading knowledge of French and German are required, but another language may be substituted if necessary to the candidate's research. The candidate must pass written and oral examinations before preparing his dissertation and an oral examination when he presents his dissertation.

Graduate Assistants have the opportunity to gain actual experience in teaching political science.

The Graduate Faculty

Members of the graduate faculty of the Department of Government have been selected for their ability as teachers and scholars and for their practical experience in governmental politics and administration at the international, national, state, and local levels. The 1958-59 graduate faculty included the following:

Name	Degree and Institution	Areas of Teaching and Research
VACLAV L. BENES	LL.D., Charles University of Prague, 1934; M.C.L., McGill University, 1950	International relations; Eastern European and Balkan governments
CECIL C. BRETT	Ph.D., University of Michigan, 1956	Far Eastern governments and politics
EDWARD H. BUEHRIG	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1942	International organization; American foreign policy
LYNTON K. CALDWELL Director of Public Service Training	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1943	Comparative public administration; state government
BYRUM E. CARTER, JR.*	Ph.D., University of Wisconsin, 1951	Political theory; comparative government
WARNER O. CHAPMAN	Ph.D., University of Virginia, 1950	American constitutional law; Western European governments
DAVID R. DERGE	Ph.D., Northwestern University, 1955	American politics and legislation; quantitative analysis
JOSEPH B. KINGSBURY	Ph.D., University of Illinois, 1929	American government and politics
CHARLES S. HYNEMAN	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1923	Public administration: national and comparative
LOUIS E. LAMBERT	Ph.D., Indiana University, 1950	American political ideas; state and local government

* Francis Bachman Lieber Award for Distinguished Teaching, 1957-58.

Students often entertain members of the faculty at informal dinners in the graduate center dining hall.

Modern buildings and attractive landscaping combine to form a pleasant campus atmosphere.

Facilities

Presently located in the Social Science Building, the Department of Government will be housed on the top two floors of Ballantine Hall, the new humanities and social science building now under construction. Departmental facilities will include a graduate student lounge, research center, and extensive seminar facilities.

Indiana University's excellent Library of one million volumes is supplemented by valuable holdings of rare books in the new Lilly Library. The Department's Bureau of Government Research also maintains extensive holdings of literature and public documents relating to American national and state government. These collections comprise one of the finest sources of research material in the nation. Graduate students are accorded preferential treatment in the use of these facilities and may obtain special stack privileges and private study carrels in the Library.

Special opportunities

Graduate students benefit from the Department's co-operative program with Thammasat University, Bangkok, Thailand. This is a joint project in public administration sponsored by the United States International Cooperation Administration and the Royal Govern-

Graduate students may obtain a private study carrel in the new stack area of the main library.

Name	Degree and Institution	Areas of Teaching and Research
WALTER H. C. LAVES Chairman	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1927	International relations, organization and administration; government in newly developing countries
J. GUS LIEBENOW	Ph.D., Northwestern University, 1955	Comparative government; African government and politics; international relations
EDWIN B. MCPHERON	Ph.D., Indiana University, 1946	State and local government, planning, financial administration
HERBERT J. MULLER	Ph.D., Cornell University, 1932	History of political ideas
FREDERICK W. RIGGS	Ph.D., Columbia University, 1948	Comparative public administration; Far Eastern government
EDGAR L. SHOR	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1954	Public administration
WILLIAM J. SIFFIN	Ph.D., Harvard University, 1957	Public administration; public policy
PRESSLY S. SIKES Dean of the Junior Division	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1937	State and local government
JOHN E. STONER	Ph.D., University of Chicago, 1937	Public law; state and local government
JOSEPH L. SUTTON	Ph.D., University of Michigan, 1954	International relations; Far Eastern governments; comparative government
ROBERT C. TUCKER	Ph.D., Harvard University, 1958	Comparative government and political theory; Soviet political system
PANAYIOTIS J. VATIKIOTIS	Ph.D., Johns Hopkins University, 1954	Comparative government and political theory; Islamic and Arabic politics
YORK WILLBERN Director, Bureau of Government Research	Ph.D., University of Texas, 1943	Public administration; state and local government

ment of Thailand. American and Thai personnel, including faculty and students, are exchanged, providing the Department with an exceptional opportunity to develop the comparative study of government and administration.

The Bureau of Government Research conducts a diversified program, with emphasis on both broad-gauged research activities and services to national, state, and local governmental units. Interested graduate students may engage in projects under the supervision of the Director of the Bureau. The Bureau sponsors several workshops on governmental problems each year.

Related to its new curriculum for the M.P.A. degree, the Department maintains an Institute of Training for Public Service which conducts guidance and placement activities for students interested in entering public service, holds conferences on public administration, and co-ordinates international technical co-operation programs, such as the Thailand project.

The Department also co-operates with interdisciplinary programs of Slavic studies and East European studies. The graduate student is offered an opportunity for integrated area specialization along with the core training in political science.

A large body of quantitative data on politics in Midwestern two-party states is available for graduate research training. The University's Research Computing Center, which is equipped with the IBM 650 Data Processing Computer, enables the student to analyze vast amounts of political behavior data, such as election statistics and legislative roll calls. Special instruction is available in quantitative analysis and statistical methods.

Financial assistance

You may be eligible for one of the many forms of financial assistance available in the Department. Each year more than twenty-five graduate awards are made available.

Teaching Associates. Stipend to $2,000. Awarded to mature students whose responsibilities include teaching sections of the introductory course.

Research Assistantships. Stipend to $2,500. Responsibilities include participation in research in public administration, state, and local government.

Graduate Assistantships. Stipend to $1,800. Responsibilities include assisting faculty in teaching activities.

University Fellowships. Stipend to $1,800, tax exempt. No service is required of holders of fellowships.

Duties required and course load carried vary with these awards. Holders of assistantships and fellowships receive the benefit of in-state tuition rates. In addition to the above, some summer assistantships are also available.

The new Pay-As-You-Learn plan of the University is available to graduate students. Under this plan, the cost of room and board may be extended over the academic year so that they can be met in ten equal payments.

Applications for these awards should be received by February 15. Write to the Chairman of the Department for application forms and further information.

Special instruction in data processing is available at the University's Research Computing Center.

Single student housing at the Graduate Residence Center features attractive accommodations and pleasant surroundings.

Career opportunities

Graduates of the University's Department of Government serve on the faculties of leading universities. They also pursue active careers in politics, engage in administrative work in public service, follow careers in the foreign service, and continue scholarly research on the frontiers of political science.

The extensive facilities of the University's Placement Bureau are available to assist the graduate in securing attractive employment. In addition, faculty members of the Department take a personal interest in placing graduates at desirable institutions.

The Department's Institute of Training for Public Service advises students interested in government service, maintains contacts with public officials, and assists in placing graduates in administrative positions on the international, national, state, and local levels.

Housing facilities

Indiana University's 1,000-acre campus is situated in the scenic hill country of southern Indiana. Forested slopes and meandering streams combine to give the campus a natural beauty of its own. The University is also within easy driving distance of large state forest preserves and beautiful state parks.

The student will find that graduate life at Indiana University is not confined to the classroom and the library. Living and dining facilities and organized social activities of the Graduate Residence Center are designed to bring together graduate students of all departments into a graduate community. This development of an intellectual and social community provides you with the opportunity to become acquainted with scholars in other fields.

Housing for graduate students receives special attention at Indiana University. The modern Graduate Residence Center, consisting of a series of two-level dormitories each housing about one hundred students, provides a unique "graduate campus" within the University. Approximately 1,000 graduate students live in the eight men's and women's dormitories grouped together to form the Center. The separate living units are connected by spacious lounges and terraces. The single or double rooms available in all units are artistically furnished with modern equipment. The graduate composition of the Center assures most favorable study conditions.

Students in the Center come together for meals in the new central dining hall. A large center lounge in the same building provides television and serves as the social center for numerous functions of the graduate community.

University apartments provide comfortable living for married graduate students.

Indiana University has many foreign students. This gives the graduate school a definite international flavor. Many of the activities of the Graduate Residence Center feature these talented foreign students on special "nights" honoring their particular country. The recently remodeled International House, located a short distance from the Center, offers additional opportunities for social contact between foreign and American students. American students are encouraged to participate in foreign-student functions and to become acquainted with people of different cultures.

The married student and his family also receive special attention at Indiana University. Attractive efficiency, one-bedroom, and two-bedroom apartments are available, furnished or unfurnished. A cooperative nursery school is maintained in Hoosier Courts for children three years old to kindergarten age. The Bloomington Metropolitan School System is one of the finest in the state.

Cultural and social opportunities

Graduate students will enjoy many cultural, social, and recreational activities. The University sponsors annual appearances of the Metropolitan Opera Association, outstanding symphony orchestras, musicians and lecturers, Broadway plays and musicals, art exhibitions, and many student productions of excellent calibre.

Graduate students in the Department have the opportunity to join Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science honorary, which recognizes scholarship and achievement within the Department through meetings and activities.

In addition to the all-University activities, the Graduate Residence Center regularly sponsors social activities of many kinds. The facilities of the Indiana Memorial Union are also available, including study lounges, television, bowling, and dancing. Many graduate students participate in the University's extensive intramural program which includes tennis, swimming, chess, soccer, bowling, basketball, and other sports. Indiana University is a member of the Big Ten, and participates in intercollegiate programs which bring some of the top teams in the nation to the campus.

The University's beautiful Auditorium provides excellent facilities for the staging of concerts, operas, ballet, recitals, Broadway dramatic productions, and lectures.

This bulletin describes very briefly the opportunities for graduate study in the field of political science at Indiana University. Such things as the intellectual atmosphere, traditions of scholarship, motivation for study, and faculty interest in the graduate student are difficult to capture in pictures and print, but they are integral parts of the climate of study in the Department of Government. We believe that the combination of these factors available in the Department of Government at Indiana University offers you attractive possibilities for graduate study in political science.

If you wish information in greater detail, please write to the Chairman, Department of Government, Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana.